India has the potential to become the leading supplier of global manpower. Traditionally, Indians are known for giving great importance to education and that has resulted in Indians being successful globally. In the US, for a long time, Indian Americans have been the most successful and richest of all the ethnicities. But this is a small percentage of the Indian population worldwide. India's population, with a considerably large percentage being very young, is a significant asset for the country. Apart from meeting our own demand for skilled manpower in various sectors, we can also aim to be the global hub of skilled manpower. Foreign language skills can catalyse this process to a considerably higher degree.

Learning a foreign language is one such trend that has seen a tremendous rise amongst Indian students in the last few years. More and more universities are offering courses in various languages to students enrolled with them.

Foreign Language Courses Popular Amongst Students

German, Spanish, French, Mandarin Chinese, and Japanese are the languages that have gained a lot of attraction and momentum amongst the Indian student community. Other popular languages are Russian, Portuguese, Italian, Arabic and Korean. Languages like Spanish, French and German share a lot of similarities with the English language. For someone with a good command over English, learning these languages wouldn't be much effort. On the other hand languages like Chinese, Japanese and Korean are a different story altogether as they have a language root completely different from the ones that Indians are used to. However, learning a new language shouldn't just be about learning to write and speak in it. It should also be about understanding the cultures and traditions of the countries native to these languages.
